The Jourt had been exceedingly careful to prevent the application of the money of those shareholders who contribute to jointstock enterprise of any description being applied to any purpose other than that which is legitimately the purpose and objects of the association. On the other hand, it is not for the benefit of the sharsholders themselves that the legi-; timate business of the association should be in any way impeded by narrowing the powers of the board of directors in such a manner as to prevent the board from carrying the objects of the joint association into full and complete activity. according to the best modes that may present themselves to the minds of the directors, and, of course, in the modes, the ordinary modes of business. The case here is totally different from the case which Mr. James has quoted, though he conceives them to be nearly similar. The case here is not that of applying funds to purposes ultra the purposes and objects of the association, but to purposes which the directors have undoubtedly considered, whother rightly or wrongly, were for securing to the company the best profits which they think one be secured by their mode of conducting the business.
